

The E.W. Scripps Co. has created a journalism fellowship program with full-time openings for journalists at its properties, including two in California. I would appreciate it if you could notify your students of this opportunity (see announcement below). If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

The E.W. Scripps has introduced a fellowship program with newsroom and digital opportunities at all of its newspaper and interactive operations, including two in California: Ventura County Star and Redding Record-Searchlight. The paid fellowships are for 24 weeks (Ventura has one year-long fellowship available) for positions as reporters, multimedia journalists, copy editors/page designers and online producers. To review requirements for the fellowship and to apply, go to www.scripps.com, click on “careers” and then click on “search jobs.” Enter “fellowship” in the keyword search box and the application will come up. Applicants should use the online tool to create a profile and include links to samples of their work.
