The fun, innovative game show, scheduled for Monday, Nov. 9 in the USU Ballrooms, will feature 12 different students from 12 different majors vying for each other’s affection, whether by a dance or simply answering a question creatively. Two shows of the game are scheduled, starting at 7 p.m.

“This show does more than hope for a love connection,” said Program Council Assistant Irving Barcenas. “We believe this is a fun and easy way to meet new people, who although might not be right for dating, have the potential to meet a great friend.”

The show will also help students develop communication skills and essential listening techniques. Playing the game will also help students reduce the feelings of public speaking anxiety since they will be forced to cope with various scenarios under different conditions in front of a live audience.

Sign-ups for “12 Major Hearts” are going on now and will continue until 5 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 5. Get an application at the Program Council office in USU-116, or download it at www.programcouncil.org.
