Part II: Utterances and Notes

- Here are some words for languages:

Déyǔ	German
Éyǔ	Russian
Fǎyǔ	French
Rìyǔ	Japanese
Yīngyǔ	English
Zhōngguó huà	Chinese
Zhōngwén	Chinese

'yǔ' means 'speech'. 'huà' is 'speech' too. 'wén' refers to a written language, but 'Zhōngguó huà' and 'Zhōngwén' can be use interchangeably.

- 'huì' means 'to be able to'. 'huì shuō...' means 'to be able to speak...'
- Pay attention to the position of 'dōu' which means 'all'. In the sentence ;'Wǒ bàba māma dōu bú huì shuō...', the adverb 'dōu' is placed after 'bàba māma'. Never say: 'Dōu wǒ bàba māma...'
- Pay attention to the position of 'zhǐ' which is before the verb 'huì'. 'I can speak French only.' would be 'Wǒ zhǐ huì shuō Fǎyǔ.'
- 'zài' is a grammatical marker which indicates that an action is or was in progress. 'zài xué Yīngyǔ' means '...am, is learning English'
- Pay particular attention to the sentence:
'Tā Yīngyǔ shuō de hěn hǎo.'
He English speaks DE very well.
This type of sentence is very much different from English. Remember: in Chinese you never say: Tā shuō Yīngyǔ hěn hǎo.
- 'nǎlǐ' or 'nǎlǐ nǎlǐ' is a polite way to respond to the compliment such as 'You speak Chinese very well.' Never respond to it saying: 'Xièxie.' Chinese people are modest and humble. They will not say 'xièxie' to respond to compliments. Also note that the actual pronunciation of 'ǎnlǐ' is 'ánlǐ' because of tone change.
- 'búcuò' is synonymous with 'hěn hǎo'.

Part III: New Sentence Modules

1. You really speak English (Chinese) well. Not at all, I am learning it...

Nǐ	Yīngyǔ Zhōngguó huà Zhōngwén	shuō de	hěn hǎo búcuò
